"Even men like a little bling bling. Yes, there is more to a groomsman's garb than coat and tie. Help him add flair with sea glass or beach stones set in sterling silver. Valerie Gates of Wellesley, Massachusetts, crafts SeaGlassWear and SeaStoneWear cufflinks and tuxedo studs...the colors lend themselves to weddings."

Yankee Magazine

Gates began designing silver-and-sea glass jewelry after her aunt passed away in July 2002 and left her an extensive collection of sea glass. "Using sea glass in jewelry is the ultimate in recycling. The ocean takes something that was discarded by man, reshapes it into a really beautiful jewel, and now it's featured in museums and worn by women at elegant parties. It is a really interesting reversal of fortune."

"The basis of Woods Hole native Valerie Gates' collection, SeaGlassWear, is a stash of beach glass that took forty years of seaside strolling to amass. Remarkably, in less than a year Gates' sea glass has made a name for itself, and now it can be found in over thirty museum shops and fine galleries nationwide."

Cape Cod Life Magazine

"Gates's simple works of sea glass wrapped in sterling silver wire are now available in thirty galleries, jewelry stores, and museum shops, including the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, the Philadelphia Museum of Art, and the Art Institute of Chicago. She takes custom orders and makes every piece herself."

Brown Alumni Magazine

"Last July, Valerie Gates had no idea she'd be developing a line of sea glass jewelry. This July, her creations are in shops and museum stores nationwide. For 40 years, her aunt had combed the beaches of Cape Cod searching for the jewels from the sea. She died last July and left behind her vast collection, a cache of five or six big bucketsful of sea glass. Her family decided that Gates, an artist, would probably be the one to do something creative with the treasure trove. And that's exactly what she did."

This original, handcrafted jewelry is hand-selected and ocean-made, therefore variations will occur and are part of the natural beauty and originality of each item.
